PARTNERSHIP FOR THE GOALS

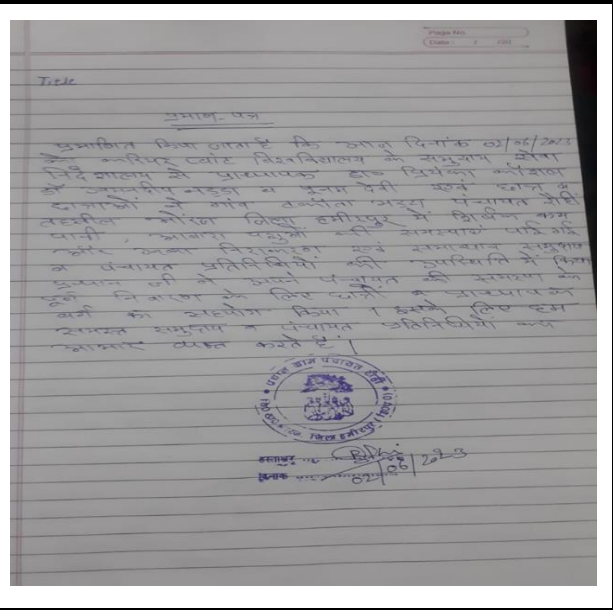

The University works with local and regional NGOs and government agencies such as Departments of Industries, Agriculture and Animal Husbandry to accomplish all the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). It also carries out dialogue with stakeholders in the concerned sectors like farming community, industries and academic institutes to further attainment of these goals. It collaborates with different organizations and shares the best practices adopted by it and also learns and understands the best practices which are adopted by different organizations to further accomplish these goals. For example, it actively collaborates with local and regional NGOs to help women self-help groups in marketing their products and also arranges training-cum-workshop to empower them with new skills and arts.

The students through NSS and other community related projects and activities and field training also actively participate in carrying out such activities which promote awareness about clean environment, women education, various government schemes launched to empower women, school children and other disadvantaged sections of the society. The issues impinging on different sustainable development goals are also investigated as research topics of Ph.D. thesis, externally funded research projects, compilation of the available technologies and disseminating these to the potential users. The issues related to these goals are also researched and published in the form of research papers in reputed journals. The work done by the University in accomplishing different goals are compiled and published separately as reports; some reports pertaining to different goals are attached herewith.

The seventeen sustainable goals also form a part of the course curriculum and the students are taught the genesis, progress and the role which the University can play in accomplishing these goals. The introduction of a separate mandatory paper in different UG and PG programmes on SDGs and the role of different sections of the society including students is under the active consideration of the University. As mentioned above, the University is actively working with wider community, including local residents, farming community, women self-help groups, disadvantaged sections of the society like scheduled caste to educate them about these goals and the ways and means to accomplish these goals.
